He stated that the conversation took place in Escajeda's office. "The conversation was in regard to the imprisonment of Jese Gallegos, I having approached Escajeda and asked if he would do me the favor to speak in his behalf. I called upon Mr. Escajeda to liberate him, and he set him free. As he was going to be set free, Montoya was there and he said that if Gallegos did not vote or left the town, then Refugio and myself would be guilty. They said Gallegos had to vote for Escajeda and his friends."

Q.—"Did you at the same time agree to vote for Escajeda and Montoya?"

A.—"Yes. Prior to that time I had made up my mind for Alderete because he had spoken to me long before that."

Senator Clapp of Minnesota leaped to his feet.

"Mr. President," he said, "this is not a question of getting through and getting home. This is a question of doing what we believe to be our duty."

Senator Overman also protested.

"Both the house and senate have voted by large majorities, to abolish this court; the people of the United States have signified their desire that the court should be abolished; the president is now lined up against the people," he said.

"I rise to a point of order," exclaimed senator Bacon, of Georgia. "I believe that it is out of order to attempt to influence the votes of senators by threatening them with what the persident will, or, will not do."

Senator Warren protested that he had only stated facts.

He will confer with senate and house leaders in the next few days and will devote most of his own time to pondering over this one bill. Most of the Republican leaders in both houses and probably some of the leading Democrats will be called into consultation

The president was told that it is and that any action he may take must be in the form of a veto, unless he can get Republican and Democratic leads to agree on a joint resolution to passed later that would show that the United States had no intention of abrogating the existing treaty with rent Britain. Such a resolution would permit foreign steamship companies to test the act's validity under the Hay-Paunce-fote treaty in the United States courts.

Important Legislation. Important legislation that must house and now before the senate, with provision abolishing commerce court.

Naval, sundry civil and army appropriation bills, in conference.
General deficiency appropriation bill,
before senate committee on appropriations. 20war

Indian appropriation bill, conference report pending in the senate.

While adjournment is expected this week the date is generally conceded to depend upon the president's attitude toward the Panama canal bill and the legislative, executive, judicial appro-priation bill. His veto of the latter measure was based upon its provisions for the abolishment of the commerce court and the establishment of a seven year tenure in the civil service; and the house has again risked the veto by passing the measure with the commerce court provision in it. The senate will determine whether it will endorse the measure in this form.

Leaders of both houses are confident the remaining work on the overdue appropriation bills could be disposed of in three days, were the contingencies of the presidential veto removed. The president has made it clear to members of both houses that he does not favor the free toll provision of the Panama canal bill, but he has not asserted a purpose to yeto that measure.

Can Not Override Veto. Thus far congress has not succeeded in overriding any of the president's vetoes, and it is not considered likely that either the legislative appropriation ares which the house has repassed over
